THE ROOT OF THE CINCINNATI RIOT.

The New York Post finds much of good in the Cincinnati riot: that it has stimulated the work of reforming the criminal procedure, and already the twenty-three peremptory challenges allowed the prisoner have been cut down to six. It hopes that the possibility of technical objection will also be narrowed. To the San Francisco News Letter it emphasizes the defects of the jury system. It says the official jury of the day seems to think its function is to strain its conscience for the purpose of acquitting. The less respectable and intelligent elements are not sufficiently represented in the jury box, and for this these elements are responsible.

To the Hear the riot preaches of the vicious element in politics projecting itself into Courts, protecting criminals, useful to the political machine. Official corruption has been for years sapping the foundations of society in Cincinnati, and precisely the same process is going on in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco. The remedy, it finds, is in awakening the better class to the necessity of taking an interest in the administration of public affairs.

The Chicago Current believes the mob was the product of the lawlessness of the law itself, and that the remedy is in the organization of citizens who have anything at stake against crime, bribable jurors and the combinations of a certain brood of lawyers, whose lives are spent in quibbling for delay, and carrying murderers over from term to term until they escape, only to repeat their bloody crimes.

The New York Times believes that the riot was due to the poisoning of justice at its source; that the peace of society was betrayed because the jury was corrupted; that the present jury system is vicious; that the safeguards for innocence have been made aids to crime; that the demand is made upon the legal profession to render it less easy for the guilty to escape, and at the same time to render the innocent no more liable to conviction.

The Chicago Times declares that it was a sudden riot, without much premeditation, and was not a mob of toughs and ruffians. To it it appears that all over the country public sentiment favors the mob. It adds: "It was an explosion of a force long gathering, and under the fact of an inefficient, feeble, uncertain and probably corrupt and vicious administration of justice." It proceeds with the thought that the majority of the law must not become the majority of injustice; the majority of imbecile or corrupt jurors; of a vicious Practice Act; of lawyers that disgrace an honorable profession; of the majority of judicial demagogues; or the majority of a criminal judiciary that is a mockery of all that the word justice implies.

The New York Herald attributes the mob to a flagrant miscarriage of justice, both the cause and effect of which are growing common throughout the country to an extent that may well cause alarm and arrest attention. The escape of murderers is the rule and conviction the exception. Out of every fourteen murderers statistics show that not one suffers on the gallows. Of all the abuses of our criminal administration, the most common and flagrant are manifest in the jury system. At every stage of criminal trials the prisoners have advantages from which the State is shut off.

We have cited these expressions as fairly representative of the voice of the whole country. It is a noteworthy fact that in no leading journal or by other avenues of public expression has there yet been made unqualified demonstration and condemnation of the Cincinnati mob. Every criticism has satisfied conscience by declaring that lawlessness and mob violence cannot be tolerated or condoned, but the
